options. David Mamet On Directing Film | eBay In On Directing Film, Mamet asserts that directors should focus on getting the point of a scene across, rather than simply following a protagonist, or adding visually beautiful or intriguing shots. Films should create order from disorder in search of the objective. David Mamet - Wikipedia Mamet's theory of directing seems to be to let the actors tell a story through action rather than narration or emotion, allowing the audience to more closely identify with the actor (who remains a sort of blank slate) and to allow the audience to construct the story line in their own mind from the actions and clues given mainly by the actors in the film.
